

PURPOSEFUL ADVENTURE

Will we have adventures forever?

13:3.3 (149.6) High spirit personalities are not given to the gratification of purposeless curiosity, purely useless adventure. There is at all times altogether too much intriguing and purposeful adventure to permit the development of any great interest in those projects which are either futile or unreal.

What makes for a good adventure?

The Urantia Book often reminds us that as we move through the universe we are on a grand adventure. In the next life we have so many new things to learn, ways to serve, and passions to satisfy. That is, hopefully, not so different from your life here. A good life on Earth is one with hopes and dreams—too many to be fulfilled, but enough to keep us busy. A sense of purpose in our activities, along with good people around us, will keep us enthusiastically active and help us to avoid ever living a dull and meaningless life.

Why is this important?

Teenagers and young adults often find themselves on adventures. You might do things like road trip across a continent with friends or move to a new city all by yourself. While you're embarking on your adventures, you can ask yourself what kind of purpose it serves. Are you establishing friendships with positive people? Are you learning a new skill that will help you in life and in serving God? Finding your purpose will make the adventure all the more sweet. And if you can't find a purpose, don't waste your time.
